

A teacher wanted to see if the use of a note card would make a difference in students scores on a quiz. 20 students were put in a room 10 were selected at random to use a note card on a quiz. The two groups were tested in separate rooms.

What are the treatments?

What is the response variable?

Does this have the three characteristics of a well designed experiment?